Synopsis

You would imagine that in a tiny island-state like Singapore, no one can get lost, let alone go missing.

Well, think again. Every year, private investigators in Singapore handle between 20 to 50 missing-person reports. This is excluding maids and debtors.

Who are these missing people?

- In 1986, two 12 year-old boys left their homes for school and they were never seen again. It was rumored that they were sold to Thailand, where they had their limbs decapitated and made to beg in the streets. They're remembered as the 'MacDonald Boys'.
- In 1985, Pan El defaulted on over $450million worth of loans to over 30 banks, and its collapse caused the then twin exchanges in Malaysia and Singapore to close for three days. By then, Peter Tham, the director of Pan Electric Industries, had already gone missing.

These are just a sampling of the juicy cases that you can expect to find on Missing.

Some of the missing people, such as the MacDonald Boys, are never found. Missing tracks down the relevant witnesses and tries to get to the bottom of them. The show's re-enactments will bring these and other memorable cases to life. And they will dispel the myth, once and for all that in a tiny, island state like Singapore, no one ever goes ...
